Introduction

Scotland Africa '97 (SA '97) is an umbrella organisation aiming to strengthen existing ties between Scotland and Africa and to create new channels of understanding and co-operation. This basic premise manifested itself in the form of a series of cultural events which took place mainly between May and October 1997. This programme is outlined in The Scotland Africa '97 Brochure (located in Folder 2 of the archive). SA '97 received a great deal of positive feedback and was deemed a huge success. Due to this, it was decided that it would be both fitting and appropriate to establish an archive to act as a permanent record of the events which took place.

This archive project is being funded and supported by the University of Edinburgh Small Project Fund, the Centre of African Studies (CAS) and Edinburgh University Library. The Archive is to be housed within the Library's Special Collections Department on the 5th Floor. Access information is available on the Library's Web site at <http://www.lib.ed.ac.uk/>. Other information on the Archive will also be available on the CAS Web site at <http://www.ed.ac.uk/~centas/cas.htm>. It is hoped that the archive will be used in two distinct ways. Firstly as a source for those wishing to examine the impact of SA '97 and secondly as a database for anyone looking for information on the organisations involved. Setting up an archive appeared to be the most logical way of ensuring that the relevant records were kept and that they were available for consultation by all interested parties.

Before going on to explain how the archive has been organised I think it is important to give an overview of Scotland Africa '97 and the events which it generated. The initial idea for the season of events came from Pravina King at the Centre of African Studies. The aim was to raise the profile of Africa within Scotland and to explore some of the links between the two from both the past and the present. These objectives were equally met by a small gathering such as the African Breakfast for 30 people held by the Friends of Namibia (Scotland) as in large scale events such as the Roots Exhibition at the City Arts Centre.

As with many other Scottish initiatives, there was a fear that the emphasis would be too much centred on Edinburgh and that the rest of the country would be ignored. While it is fair to say that Edinburgh did host a large number of the events it would be untrue to conclude that it dominated the proceedings. Scotland Africa '97 offices were established in Edinburgh, Glasgow and Aberdeen, supporting events from Selkirk to Blantyre to Stromness.

The aim was to highlight and celebrate the interaction of African and Scottish cultural traditions present in Scotland. It was hoped that, by staging events as varied as a Ceramic Art Exhibition, a Conference (Strangers and Citizens), a Fashion Show, a Football Match or a play about Mungo Park, Scotland Africa '97 would appeal to a broad cross-section of the general public. It would be impossible to choose one highlight from this spectacular range of events. But amongst the most visible and memorable would be the Africa Bus, the Quad Concert and Preacher Man (about Livingstone).

Clearly a project of this size generates a large amount of paperwork and I have had to be selective about what exactly to include. The material chosen aims to show the breadth of
